

How to review the translations

Thank you for helping. This is everything you need — about four minutes to read, and no technical knowledge required.

What you are doing

We had a computer translate a dataset from English into your language. You are checking its work, one record at a time.

Getting in

1. Open the link you were sent.
2. Log in/signup with your email and password
3. Click the project with your language in its name.
4. Click Label All Tasks. The first record appears.

What one record looks like

Each record is one test case. At the top is a grey box with its reference number and some technical details (its id, category, and the rule used to grade it). That box is for information only

Below it, the record is laid out side by side:

- English. The original. It is always right.
- your language below the English. The computer's translation, in editable boxes.

Each row is one part of the record: the rule text, the user's question, and so on. The number of rows varies — some records have more parts than others.

What to do

Go down the rows. For each one:

- If the translation is fine, do nothing at all. Move to the next row.
- If it is wrong, click in the box and fix it. The current translation is already there, so usually you are changing a word or two, not retyping.

When you have been down every row, click Submit. The next record loads.

Anything you didn't touch is kept exactly as it was — leaving a box alone is how you say "this one is correct".

Four things that matter

Quotation marks. Some lines contain a word inside quotes, like Never use the word 'promise'. A computer later searches for that exact quoted word, so keep it inside its quotes — and make sure the quoted word is the translated one, not the English one.

Angle brackets. Some answers contain `` and ``. Leave them exactly where they are, letter for letter. They are not words and must not be translated.

One keyword per line. The keywords row holds a list. Keep one keyword on each line — don't join them with commas.

Some rows repeat each other on purpose. The "system rule" row is the context and the rule joined into one line. If you change the rule, change it in the system rule row too, the same way.

The note box

At the bottom of every record there is an optional note box. Use it when something is genuinely unclear — the English is confusing, or there are two reasonable translations and you don't know which is wanted. Write the note, leave the text as it is, and submit. Someone will look at it.

Please use the note instead of guessing.

Things people ask

The translation is understandable but slightly awkward. Leave it. Only fix meaning that is wrong, words that are missing, or phrasing no one would say.

An answer is in French, not my language. That is deliberate — a few records test whether an AI can answer in French. Leave it alone.

The question is rude, or strange. Also deliberate. Some records test how an AI handles a hostile or odd question. Translate the tone as it is; don't soften it.

I made a mistake on a record I already submitted. Click the project name at the top, find the row in the list, click it, fix it, and submit again.

Do I have to finish in one sitting? No. Each record is saved when you submit it. Close the tab and come back whenever you like.

Something looks broken, or the same record keeps appearing or have further questions. Reach out.
